The term karst derived from the name of the karst plateau called Kras in Slovene, Carso in Italian, and Karst in German. In the antiquity it was called Carsus, Carusadus, Mons Carusad, etc., which came from the root kar/gar, kara/gara, meaning rock, stone. In the literature there are known numerous examples of names derived the base kar(r)a/gar(r)a. Furthermore the word of the regional name Kras in the Slovene language has also a common meaning, that is a rocky, stony, no good or useful (for cultivation or pasture) part of land. In Slovenia it is possible to find many names derived from kras. When we are talking about the term “karst” we are usually considering only the direct link *kar(a)/gar(a) -> Carusadus -> Kras (Karst, Carso). But beside the regional name there are numerous names, as toponyms, names of geographical and morphological features, of settlements, and of waters derived from this root.
