Factor Analytic Study of Adolescent Attitudes Towards Caves

Linda Gentry EL-DASH and Oscarlina Aparecida FURQUIM SCALEANTE
lindage@terra.com.br

The protection of caves depends principally on the collaboration of the general public. One way to stimulate this collaboration is through the involvement of children and adolescents to caves while they are young so they will become interested in them. The present study presents a factor-analytic study identifying five factors underlying adolescent attitudes towards caves which can be explored.